After election, private sector body has no choice but to end factionalism, and fight a common enemy—Covid-19 pandemic

The faction led by incoming president Golchha loses, but he holds out an olive branch so that it can jointly lobby government for support to rehabilitate pandemic-hit businesses.

PRITHVI MAN SHRESTHA KATHMANDU, NOV 29

With the end of the pandemic not in sight, these are testing times for the business sector the world over. It is no different in Nepal.

On Sunday, Nepal's business sector got a new leadership. With incumbent senior vice-president of the Federation of Nepalese Chambers of Commerce and Industry stepping up to the presidency, as per its statute, the elections held on Saturday had all eyes on the fight for the position of the new senior vice-president.

Incoming president Shekhar Golchha had openly opposed newly-elected senior vice-president Chandra Prasad Dhakal. But now they have to work together on behalf of the business community.

This may be easier said than done. "Those who contested for the top leadership may have made promises to lobby with the government in their interest or to give certain roles in the federation," said Hemanta Dabadi, who had served as director general of the Federation for many years. "Therefore this struggle to accommodate the rival faction may invite further bad blood within the Federation.

The animosity between Dhakal and Golchha has a history.

A faction within the Federation, in which Golchha believes Dhakal was involved, had unsuccessfully sought to amend the provision that paves the way for senior vice-president to become president automatically. In the 2017 Federation election, Dhakal had contested from Golchha's panel for the post of vice-president and won.

But talking to the Post, Golchha said that there is no rivalry anymore.

"During the elections, the panels were created but they should not exist after the elections are over," Golchha told the Post. "Dhakal is one of the most successful businesspersons and I hope to get full cooperation from him. Whatever knowledge he has will be beneficial for the private sector."

While Golchha belongs to one of Nepal's oldest business and industrial houses, Dhakal is a relative newcomer, a self-made man who began with a cargo business but now has interests in banking, insurance, tourism and hydropower, among others. Dhakal is also the brain behind the International Money Express, or IME, group that started in 2001.

While the Golchhas have traditionally been close to the Nepali Congress as they are based in Biratnagar the ancestral home of the Koiralas who nurtured the party, Dhakal is considered to be close to the Nepal Communist Party (NCP) leadership.

But now, Dhakal similarly has made a conciliatory note. "There will be no more panels in the Federation after the elections are over," Dhakal told the Post. "The newly elected leadership will work to serve the interest of the entire private sector."

are huge. It needs to lobby hard with the government for policies that will revive the economy and such policies may be needed for years, according to a study by the government.

The business community expects that both factions will now move forward together in the interest of the

"I think it is time to be united to pursue the interests of the business community in the wake of Covid-19,' said Pashupati Muraka, former president of the Federation, who had lobbied against Dhakal. "As Dhakal will next term, he has no need to keep his faction alive. Therefore, businessmen from both factions will unite under the leadership of Golchha."

But observers are not sure that this

"It will be difficult for any leadership to remove the substance of rivalry even after the elections are over, even if they promise to go together,' said Dabadi.

The reason for Dabadi's doubts is history at the Federation.

When the two factions led by former vice-presidents Bhaskar Rajkarnikar and Pradeep Jung Pandey contested for the post of president in 2014, before the current provision of the senior vice-president was introduced in 2016, the feud remained even after the elections were over and Pandey won.

The Pandey faction later blamed the Rajkarnikar faction for the arrest and subsequent jail term for the newly-elected Pandey in 2015. Pandey was arrested in March 2015, and imprisoned for three months before he was released through a presidential pardon, for not serving a jail term despite being convicted of corruption when he was an employee at the Department of Water Supply and Sewage in the 1980s.

After he was jailed, Pandey was removed from the presidency and Pashupati Murarka was elected president for the remaining term. The Federation's statute was subsequently amended following that incident of

But at present both Golchha and Dhakal have an enemy in the form of the pandemic.

In conversation with the Post, both the incoming president and newly-elected senior vice-president said that their focus would be on negotiating with the government to provide relief for businesses suffering from the pandemic.

Although the private sector as a whole has suffered badly from the pandemic, micro, small and medium enterprises and tourism industry have been hit worse.

The government and the central bank have introduced a number of relief packages, which are mostly related to debt relief, but the private sector says the support is not enough.

Chinese stopover militarily significant, politically symbolic

Officially, it is a continuation of exchanges between the two armies, but insiders say Wei's visit is reaffirmation of the messages an advance team from north delivered last week.

He came. He met. He left.

Chinese State Councillor and Defence Minister Wei Fenghe on Sunday landed in Kathmandu for a day-long stopover during which he held a whirlwind of meetings with Prime Minister KP Sharma Oli, also the defence minister, President Bidya Devi Bhandari and Nepal Army Chief straight to Pakistan in the evening. The major takeaway of Wei's visit, according to officials, is an understanding on resuming Chinese supplies of various non-lethal military aid to Nepal, which had been halted due to the Covid-19 pandemic. The Nepal Army said Wei also carried the message of his government that it is positive about resumption of training and student exchange programmes and following up on defence assistance that have been impacted in the wake of the pandemic.

Purna Chandra Thapa before flying

There, however, is more to this than

The visit of Wei, who is also a general in the Chinese People's Liberation Army, was aimed at reasserting what was already communicated to the Nepali leadership, especially Prime Minister Oli, also the chair of the ruling Nepal Communist Party, according to at least two high-level sources.

The sources said that ahead of Wei's visit to Kathmandu, a three-member high-level Chinese team had arrived in Kathmandu on November 24 and communicated Beijing's concerns to the top political leadership of Nepal's ruling and opposition parties. Despite Beijing's growing concerns vis-a-vis the rift in the Nepal Communist Party (NCP) and the Nepali Congress' new-found rhetoric over land encroachment by China in the Humla region, Wei did not touch upon any political matters during his meeting with Prime Minister and Minister for Defence Oli.

"Since Beijing's message had been already communicated, his arrival means the assertion," said a source familiar with the development, who did not wish to be named citing the sensitivity of the matter. "In diplomacy, it's more symbolism, less is said."

According to the sources, the Chinese advance team—two from the Chinese Military Commission and one from the International Department of the Chinese Communist Party-had met with Oli, Pushpa Kamal Dahal, the other chair of the ruling party Home Minister Ram Bahadur Thapa, Sher Bahadur Deuba, the leader of the main opposition, and senior officials from various agencies.

The team had communicated China's various political and security concerns, the sources told the Post. The Chinese team had arrived just two days before Indian Foreign Secretary Harsh Vardhan Shringla landed in Kathmandu on a two-day visit.

Foreign employment office limits per day quota of labour permits to 300

The token system would be strictly implemented to serve migrant workers and minimise mismanagement.

CHANDAN KUMAR MANDAL

KATHMANDU, NOV 29

Foreign Employment Office in Tahachal, Kathmandu, has strictly implemented the token system for distributing labour permits to outbound Nepali migrant workers from Sunday.

The Office, under the Department of Foreign Employment—the government body overseeing the overall foreign employment sector—has decided to provide 300 tokens to aspirant migrant workers daily to reduce the hassles faced by beneficiaries.

According to Chhatra Bahadur Shah, director at the Tahachal office, the token system would be strictly implemented to serve migrant workers who visit the office for the labour permit and minimise mismanagement which was going on in recent

"We have decided to enforce the token system strictly so as to make the whole process organised. We noticed that even when we fixed 150 or 200 tokens for a particular day, around 15-20 beneficiaries would visit the office at the last moment requesting for labour permits without acquiring the token," Shah told the Post. "Now, we have increased the number of tokens to 300 but we will not be providing services to those who do not have

Around 180 outbound migrant workers have been visiting the Tahachal-based office for labour per-

To receive work permits, migrant workers have to submit applications online to schedule the date and time with the respective labour offices in

However, a large number of applicants used to miss their schedule while others visited the office without appointments, causing problems in service delivery, according to Shah.

"We found out that several migrant workers were visiting the office with out making appointments saying that they had flight to catch on the same night. Some of them even produced fake flight tickets to receive labour permits by avoiding the regular process," said Shah. "It is also not possible to check everyone's tickets. The office would urgently issue labour permits to those whose visas are about to expire even if they had not come via the regular application process. So now the office is not going to issue any extra work permits beyond the 300 tokens.

The Tahachal office had also observed applicants making appointments by booking all the tokens issued for a day and not appearing on the scheduled date.

Shah said they would visit the office as per their convenience hindering the day-to-day operation of the office.

"With the available human resources, we still can cater to 600-700 applicants in a day. We also do not send any applicants back if they have already taken the token but those not visiting on their scheduled day makes the services difficult," said Shah.

With the resumption of foreign employment, which had remained closed since mid-March, migrant workers have started visiting labour offices for receiving labour permits. Although the Covid-19 concerns are still there, Nepali migrant workers have continued to seek jobs abroad.

Since the government started issuing re-entry labour permits in June, around 200 workers have been receiving labour-permits every day—which is lower than pre-pandemic time, according to Shah.

"This is a prime season for Nepali migrant workers leaving abroad for jobs. Once the festive season of Dashain and Tihar is over, we see a surge in people migrating. The number goes further up after the Chhath festival," said Shah. "However, the current trend is slow which is because of the Covid-19 pandemic.

Six people arrested in connection with 'honour killing' of 17-year-old in Rautahat

SHIVA PURI

Six people have been arrested in connection to the murder of a 17-year-old girl in Rautahat. Among the arrested are the victim's father and mother. According to the police, the murder of the girl is a case of honour killing.

Police said their investigation has shown that the victim's father had paid some henchmen money to kill his 17-year-old daughter in fear of losing the 'family's honour', as his divorced daughter was in a relationship with another man in the village

According to District Police Office Chief SP Siddhi Bikram Shah, preliminary investigation has shown that the family members had orchestrated a plan to kill the 17-year-old in order to save the family's honour.

"As per the investigation, the victim's parents paid off some people to kill their daughter," said Shah. "They feared losing the family's 'honour' if the girl eloped with her lover.'

The victim was living with her parents after divorcing her husband. She was allegedly married-off to a man

"My first focus will be to negotiate with the government to provide relief pandemic," said Golchha.

Working in the interests of the private sector will aid the whole of the economy, observers say.

"The federation's leadership can guide the government to introduce policy that helps the entire economy," said Dabadi. "For this, it is necessary that they make policy recommendations based on the findings of research rather than the interests of different people at the Federation."

This is what Golchha says he will do. "I will establish a think tank at the Federation soon."

Chinese stopover militarily significant, politically symbolic

During their meeting with Deuba, border encroachment issue in Humla, which the Nepali Congress has been fiercely raising, largely based on a report by Jeevan Bahadur Shahi, the party's Provincial Assembly member in Karnali.

The Chinese Embassy Kathmandu, on November 13, had even written to the Nepali Congress, expressing its displeasure at the ways the issue was being raised. A few days before, the Global Times, the Chinese government's mouthpiece, had also implicated the Congress party as the main institution behind "fabricated reports" on Chinese encroachment.

Confirming the visit of the Chinese advance team, a ruling party leader told the Post that during their meetings with the top leadership of the ruling party, they communicated that China is in favour of political stability in Nepal and that it wants to see continuation of the present establishment in Kathmandu.

"The team members communicated Beijing's view that it has a high-level understanding with the present NCP leadership and that it wants to see the continuity of the present regime in Kathmandu," said the leader familiar with the visit and the meetings, who requested anonymity because he was not allowed to speak to the media.

Upon his arrival at Tribhuvan International Airport, where he was welcomed by Home Minister Thapa, Wei said his visit was aimed at implementing bilateral agreements reached between China and Nepal.

"My visit is aimed at enhancing mutual military assistance and strengthening the existing ties between the two countries," said Wei in a brief comment to the Rastriya Samachar Samiti news agency. "Ties between China and Nepal are strong and I am here to take this relationship to new heights. I am confident about having a result-oriented visit.

Though Prime Minister Oli as the defence minister is Wei's counterpart, the Chinese official first headed to the Nepal Army headquarters where he received a guard of honour before holding the delegation-level talks.

"Bilateral discussions at the delegation level were held mainly on issues pertaining to resumption of training and student exchange programmes and follow up on defence assistance impacted due to the Covid-19 pandemment. "Wei and the delegation viewed both the proposals positively and should resume as soon as possible, including exchange of high-level visits. Wei also pledged to provide additional assistance to the Nepal Army in fighting the Covid-19 pandemic."

Discussions on signing of the protocol for the agreements worth around 300 million RMB (approximately Rs5.4 billion) which were reached during two high-level visits last year by Deputy Prime Minister Ishwar Pokhrel, who then held the defence portfolio, in October, and General Thapa, in June, according to the Nepal

Wei is senior most Chinese official to visit Kathmandu after Chinese President Xi Jinping.

Paudyal, spokesperson for the Nepal Army, told the Post.

Wei is the senior most Chinese official to arrive since Chinese President Xi Jinping's visit to Kathmandu in October last year, the first by the Chinese head of state in 23 years. Wei is the second Chinese defence minister to visit Nepal in the last two decades, after Chang Wanquan' trip to Kathmandu in May 2017.

Chang, who was the first Chinese defence minister to arrive in Kathmandu in 16 years, led a 19-member delegation for a three-day visit. Chang's visit had taken place on the eve of a planned military exercise between the Nepal Army and the People's Liberation Army, the first between the two countries.

Wei's visit also comes days after a visit by Indian Foreign Secretary Shringla who concluded his two-day Nepal trip on Friday. Shringla's arrival in Nepal was preceded by two backto-back visits from the south-by the chiefs of Indian Army and India's forin the third week of November, respecis committed to implementing the agreements reached during the visits of President Bhandari and his to China as well as President Xi's to Nepal," Bhattarai told the Post. "The prime minister also said that Nepal wants to learn from China's steadfast progress on socio-economic fronts made in such a short span of time."

According to Bhattarai, the prime minister also appreciated the way China managed to take the Covid-19 pandemic under control.

Bhattarai said Wei, in response, appreciated Nepal's commitment to one-China policy and said that Nepal and China share trouble-free relations and are ready to contribute to each other's development and pros-

Apart from its interest in Nepal's political matters, which is also evident from the Chinese embassy's overt engagements with the ruling party leadership, Beijing has concerns about the sluggish implementation of projects under its Belt and Road Initiative, to which Nepal signed up back in 2016. Analysts in interviews over the past few days told the Post that Beijing is also keenly watching the geopolitical engagements in the region, including an understanding between the United States and India to counter China.

After about year-long frosty relations, New Delhi is already in a bid to effect a rapprochement with Kathmandu just as Beijing was expanding its sphere of influence in Nepal.

Wei wrapped up his visit by paying a courtesy call on President Bidya Devi Bhandari in the evening.

The Nepal Army stated that it is confident this visit will help in further strengthening and expanding the cordial military-to-military relations between the two countries.

Epic effort to keep King Gesar legend alive

By singing ballads and storytelling, a group of folk artists in Nagchu city in the Tibet autonomous region are doing their best to ensure the many adventures of King Gesar will not be forgotten.

The Epic of King Gesar is rooted in folklore and oral history passed down through generations of Tibetans. It has been called the Orient's Homeric Epic and is said to be the longest story in the world, consisting of 120 volumes and 20 million words in more than 1 million verses.

The epic tells the 1,000-year old legend of King Gesar, who was known to vanquish the evil and help the poor. The epic is still being performed by residents of Tibet and its neighboring regions.

King Gesar, which is presented in a performance that combines chanting, storytelling and ballad singing, is popular in Tibet and the Tibetan communities in Qinghai, Sichuan and Gansu provinces. Nagchu in the north of Tibet holds an important position in the King Gesar performing art, as it is home to the largest number of King Gesar performing artists in Tibet and the surrounding regions.

However, as the performing art is passed down through an oral tradition, how to preserve it in modern times has become a pressing challenge, according to local officials and researchers.

"In Nagchu, there are more than 90 certificated masters in the King Gesar performing art, the largest number in all the regions in Tibet," said Li Hongwei, head of the cultural bureau of Nagchu city.

But he noted that many of the King Gesar artists are not well educated; many are illiterate.

"They cannot read but they are excellent artists for performing the King Gesar epic," Li said.

The official explained that there are many different ways to inherit the performing art, not just learning it by reading.

"In addition to learning by reading, most of the artists acquired their skills through listening to oral teachings of elder masters.

"The most incredible thing is that many artists got the performing skill in a mysterious way beyond one's imagination. They said they were taught by the gods or some supernatural beings," Li said.

One such example is Phurbu. The 42-year-old artist said he began his career as a King Gesar storyteller and ballad singer at the age of 14 after he had a strange dream.

"In the dream, I saw myself as a with a huge sword in my hand.

"Once wakened up, I could not help telling the stories to my parents. The stories are so long that it took me days and nights to tell.

"I just felt I was a reincarnation of somebody else. And the stories just happened in my previous lives hundreds of years ago.

"I was later told that those are the stories of King Gesar and my presentation with storytelling and ballad singing was just typical of the King Gesar art," Phurbu said.

The King Gesar performing art was added to the UNESCO Intangible Cultural Heritage list in 2009. This demonstrates international recognition of the local art in Tibet and its neighboring regions.

Dawa Dundrup, curator of Nagchu Cultural Museum, has been engaged in the research of the King Gesar performing art for nearly three decades.

His job is to identify performing artists in the countryside of Nagchu.

"Once I receive a report that a King Gesar artist has been found, I will go to the site immediately to see his performance.

"If the performer is identified as a qualified King Gesar artist according to his performance, I would register his personal information like name and ID number and help to grant him a certificate," Dawa Dundrup said.

With respect to the standards of recognizing a qualified performer, Li of the cultural bureau said: "The performance should be recognized by the audience; the total length of performance should be more than 20 hours; the ballad singing and storytelling should have a style unique to himself; and the content of the performance should be centered on the King Gesar epic.

"How to ensure the artists can be better paid is a major concern of the cultural authorities," Li said.

He added that while the government offers a certain amount of subsidy, the artists are encouraged to perform in tourist destinations and at local tourist festivals.

To better preserve the art, cultural officials are co-operating with the autonomous region's authorities to create a database for the art by shooting videos of the performances and are creating text documents.

Researchers on tour to save art and record performances

To promote the preservation and inheritance of the King Gesar ballad singing and storytelling, Tibet recently launched a campaign for the research of the art in many areas of the autonomous region.

A team, consisting of experts and technicians from the King Gesar Research Institute of Tibet University, Potala Cultural Tourism Group and Tibet Jueluo Science Co, started their research trip on Sept 8.

The team's major destinations include Nagchu, Chamdo and Ngari, where the King Gesar performance art is popular. Their mission focuses on rescuing documents relating to the art, especially handwritten scriptures held by the performing artists. For those performers who acquired their skills from oral teaching, video records will be made and text documents will be created according to the videos.

Tenzin Norbu, head of the team, said creating a database using digital technologies is another important part of the research mission. It will be of great significance to the preservation and development of the centuries-old

New homes built to keep ancient village intact

After he moved into a new settlement at the end of 2019, 70-year-old Sonam Tsering is pleased with his new home equipped with new appliances.

A traditional village protection project took place in Sonam Tsering's village of Tsogo, Tsogo township in Kongpo'gyada county of the Tibet autonomous region, contributing to cultural preservation and improved livelihoods.

Surrounded by snow-capped mountains and forests, Tsogo village is 10 kilometers away from Baksum Tso Lake, one of the region's most famous tourist sites. It is regarded as a well preserved traditional Tibetan village.

To ensure protection, the county government of Kongpo'gyada, which is under the administration of Nyingchi city, invested more than 93 million yuan ($13 million) in building a resettlement close by. Sonam Tsering moved to his new home with another 106 households.

With an average altitude of 3,500 meters, featuring a spectacular natural landscape and unique Tibetan cultural resources, the village was deemed a historical and cultural village by the Tibet autonomous region's government in 2013. In 2015, the Ministry of Housing and Urban-Rural Development recognized it as a traditional Chinese village.

Thanks to the relocation project, all 63 traditional houses — with a history of between 200 and 600 years — are now under official protection.

Tsogo literally means "head of the lake" in Tibetan language. The air in this village is so fresh that the snow-capped mountains are seen clearly from miles away.

Tsogo village in Kongpo'gyada county is one of the well-preserved traditional villages in Tibet.

Palden Nyima / China Daily

Tenzin Dondrub, Party secretary of the Tsogo township, said the relocation project aimed to preserve the village and improve livelihoods. The local government will encourage villagers to be involved in tourism as a way of income generation.

He said relocating the residents to the new settlement would better protect the village, which features many ancient Tibetan architectural elements, and it will attract tourists as the villagers' new houses now have running water, heating and indoor toilets.

Tenzin Dondrub said the old houses were built hundreds years ago and most of them were vulnerable to strong winds and rain. The situation was a potential threat to people' lives and property.

Moving out of the traditional houses has halted the risk of damaging the ancient buildings by excessive human activities, he said.

As an effective measure to enhance preservation, a cultural relics protection team was set up in the village in early 2019.

Norbu Tsering, an official of the village, said he was happy with the relocation plan and the measures to protect the traditional houses.

"In the past, we used to put livestock on the first floor of the house and it was not tidy and clean as in the new settlement. Now we keep all the livestock out of the villagers' houses," said Norbu Tsering.

"The old houses reflect the traditional architectural culture of Tibetan residences in the Nyingchi region; there is a high value for historical and cultural studies," he added.

Norbu Tsering is working on establishing a tourism company and plans to attract more tourists to the village.

Tibet currently has more than 30 traditional villages. Enriched with geographic and traditional elements, each village reflects a particular historical and cultural background.

"In the future, we will make sure that traditional village architecture gets proper protection and we can be proud of the cultural heritage when outsiders visit our village," said Norbu Tsering.

Generations of incense makers boost production

Fragrant smoke permeates the air when the village is spotted in the middle of a valley near the Yarlung Zangpo River.

The village of Thonba, located in the Thonba township of Nyemo county in Tibet, is renowned for its history of Tibetan incense production.

Most families there are involved in the production and sale of incense. The village has two companies and one cooperative engaged in the trade.

The village is located by the Thonchu Stream — a tributary of Yarlung Zangpo — and has a population of around 1,100. Locals have built mills in the middle of the stream to ground pieces from the trunks of juniper trees into powder, an essential ingredient in making incense.

Sonam Norbu, a 72-year old villager, said he has spent a lifetime making incense. He learned the skill at the age of 10 from his father.

He said: "My father was respected by all villagers as an outstanding incense producer. I learned the skills as part of our tradition."

Sonam Norbu has also taught the skill to his family. "My son has spent some 20 years and my daughter-in-law 13 years in the business," he said. "The tradition will pass on to the next generation. I am very proud of them."

Chamba Trinley, 20, a fellow villager, is also involved in the incense trade. "I make incense at my home and sell it to the village cooperative," he said. He added that 35 families are part of the cooperative, which has "helped to expand our market".

"Companies from Lhasa and other regions purchase the products from our cooperative," said Chamba Trinley.

Five members of Chamba Trinley's family, including his father, are in the incense trade.

According to Tasang, an official in the village, villagers have been relying on incense as their main source of income for more than 1,300 years.

A few successful local business people lead the village in the business.

Gyatso is the owner of one of the village's two incense companies. He has been engaged in incense production for more than 35 years and was employed by the county government as a production guide for the county's incense training program from 1994-98.

Gyatso learned the skill of incense production, which he said involves around 30 procedures, as a child from his father. He is currently an outstanding incense maker in the village, as he is skilled at finding new herbs to be used as ingredients.

"Unlike most villagers who produce one or two kinds of incense based on traditional methods, I have found six new herbs as incense ingredients. Altogether, I produce six different incense products," Gyatso said.

In 2008, he established his company, which has provided job opportunities for impoverished families in the village.

Tamasha in the party

As top leaders of the ruling Nepal Communist Party cancel each other, it is the people who suffer.

It hasn't ended yet, the series of exchanges of what are now mockingly called 'love letters' between Nepal Communist Party co-chairs KP Oli and Pushpa Kamal Dahal. On Saturday, Oli, who is also the prime minister, responding to Dahal's political document presented at the November 13 Secretariat meeting, called it a collection of personal dissatisfaction, limitless frustration and vested interest that deserved to be discarded at first glance. Each time, the two senior-most leaders of the ruling party come up with yet another round of accusations and coun-

In his latest document, Oli has covered a range of issues including federalism, coronavirus, nationalism, socialism, crony capitalism, transitional justice, the Baluwatar land grab scam, politicians' fancy lifestyles, and the language and tone of Dahal's political document, among others. In almost each of the issues he raises in the document, Oli expresses his dismay over the co-chair's actions and has called for 'sacrifice' for the larger good of the party and the country while he presents himself more or less as a saintly figure. By putting on record his dissatisfactions with Dahal's actions within the party, Oli has more or less made clear his keenness to downsize the

It's a tamasha worth watching, except that it is at a huge cost to the lives and livelihoods of the citizens in the middle of the Covid-19 pandemic. When two elephants fight, it is the grass that gets trampled. Even today, the wish of the people could be to see that they stay together for the sake of the nation, as a possible breaking apart of the party means yet another round of political instability. But for that, the leaders must act like adults and begin work towards strengthening not only the party, but also the government. If the in-fighting continues, there will soon come a time when the people would want to see the part break apart rather than see them fight all the time.

The in-fighting between the two factions in the ruling Nepal Communist Party can't be taken lightly as it has caused a great deal of harm to the country. It is not just a random political party, but one that has been leading the country for the past two years and a half. Moreover, its bickering has a direct impact on the direction that the country takes. With their low-grade factionalism, the ruling party's top leaders have turned their much-touted mission of Prosperous Nepal, Happy Nepalis into a cuss word already. It is utterly shameful that the senior-most leaders of the ruling party have spent precious time in endless bickering over their hold over the organisation and completely disregarded the concerns of the citizens.

Contributions to Nepali

I am very grateful to Deepak Thapa for raising concerns about the fate of Nepali studies in Euro-America, and for his kind words about my own work over the years ('Nepali language at SOAS', November 25). I would like to add that much of what we achieved at SOAS University of London would not have been possible without the contribution of my colleague Krishna Pradhan. Pradhan taught Nepali at SOAS for 15 years until his own early retirement in 2019, and was greatly admired by the many students who learned so much from him. His presence at SOAS also enabled me to develop courses in Nepali literature, history and culture alongside the essential language courses. Sadly, none of this will be available to future generations of students in

The envoy and diplomacy

A saner act would be self-introspection rather than blaming the neighbours.

ATUL K THAKUR

While diplomacy can't be sentimental, essentially it should be courteous. Harsh Vardhan Shringla, India's foreign secretary, is in Kathmandu, and it is indeed heart-warming how India's top diplomatic envoy can speak fluent Nepali and understands the norms that safeguard India-Nepal relations. Shringla's visit to Nepal follows two recent high-level visits from India by Indian Army Chief General Manoj Mukund Naravane earlier this month and Samant Goel, chief of India's external intelligence agency Research and Analysis Wing (R&AW) in the third week of October.

Without linking the visits to a common cause, the rapprochement from both sides should be welcomed. During the last three high-profile visits from India, Prime Minister KP Oli made himself available to meet the visiting officials, giving the required impetus to the partnership. What does it suggest? India is keeping business as usual and working on the projects undertaken before the China-originated coronavirus flattened the world, and the boundary issue suddenly found extra prominence. It would be too naive to say anything else of a significant nature has taken place in the partnership. Apparently, a choice makes a big differ ence either way.

Resuming air services

The Oli government had completely misunderstood a very crucial stage in history and abstained from pursuing 'enlightened self-interest' when China did everything possible to alter the Reportedly, the Tourism Ministry has once again proposed resuming flight services to India more than one and a half months after its first proposal was rejected outright by the government amid soured relations with the southern neighbour over a boundary dispute. To keep an independent and balanced worldview, the most important virtue to be relied on is a 'sense of Prithvi Narayan Shah called Nepal a 'yam between two boulders' referring to India and China. For British India, Nepal was a buffer zone between China and India. In the present time and context, by not aligning domestic policies with international affairs, Nepal has a better chance to practise a serious non-alignment policy. Remarkably, Nepal has a long history of sovereignty and independent status. Even nonconformists will not forget that the Gorkha Kingdom appealed to the British Empire for protection from a Chinese attack through Tibet. The first British mission came to Nepal in 1793 followed by the next one in 1802.

The collaboration didn't last long however, and the Anglo-Nepal War or Gorkha War (1814-16) was fought between the Gorkha Kingdom and the British East India Company. A British victory and the 1816 Sugauli Treaty ended the war. With the treaty, Nepal renounced its territorial claims on the Tarai, and parted with its conquests west of the Kali River that reached up to the Sutlej River. Nepal could retain its independence, though it had to be under the supervision of a British resident sent to look after the protectorate. Nepal succeeded in not letting the British resident be a 'controlling agent' of the British East India Company that ruled its immediate neighbour India.

In 2020, it is still worthwhile to look back and know well about the choices exercised by Nepal, and the glorious journey of overcoming the challenges. With hindsight, a saner act would be self-introspection rather than blaming the neighbours. The neighbours are not the 'boulders', Nepal is not a 'yam'. In fact, it should not be a conduit for 'bridge diplomacy'. As a country with immense possibilities and aspirations, Nepal should think of a free-spirited move in its foreign affairs. It should give 'realism' well-deserved traction. However, this should not be confused as a new system bound to overlook the conventional wisdom that helps in knowing friends and adversaries in difficult times.

As a matter of fact, Nepal can do without seeing India and China in comparison. This will be particularly helpful in avoiding any impending consequences, especially avoiding the risk of turning into a 'geostrategic hotspot' in South Asia. Nepal, a modern republic, should strengthen its democracy and democratise its institutions. It should underline a development strategy that has an inclusive nature. To bring it into action, a participatory model should be followed. For managing its affairs in the world with new vigour and progressive thinking, Nepal has to bring the home in order. Realising it will be a true diplomatic nicety.

The visit of the Indian foreign secretary will help India's development partnership assistance to Nepal. It is expected that with the ongoing and potential infrastructure projects, connectivity between the two countries will see promising times ahead. Timing is particularly crucial for cooperation in coping with the existential challenges with Covid-19. As the first vaccine is about to be launched in India, Nepal can stay assured of all assistance from the southern neighbour.

Economic cooperation

Also, it is high time that economic cooperation was given its due to ensure a post-pandemic economic rebound. The bilateral engagement has to be proactive. Long-pending matters related to treaties and territories should get an official mechanism so they can be tabled and sorted out with a trust-based approach. Such matters should not stop Nepal's top leadership from engaging with India and resuming flight opera tions with the required pandemic-related caution. The policies should have humane consideration. The unprecedented crisis merits a brave counter-response. In testing times like this, there is a need to work together to save lives and livelihoods. Nepal should reciprocate, and this will positively support millions of people across the

Without prefixing, the Indian envoy termed Nepal a 'friend' of India. In essence, a friend for all seasons. He said that not in the Queen's language, but in chaste Nepali. He has reset the tone for benign diplomacy. This is the need of the hour and should be taken seriously. In equal measure, decision-makers of both countries should work on it and clear the fog. We all should rise to the Venal leaders wreck the institutional foundations of their countries governance systems.

America's fifth column

CHRIS PATTEN

The Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe in the 1970s was a product of the Cold War standoff between the liberal democratic West and the communist Soviet bloc. The body's name accurately described its role. As the Soviet empire crumbled, the OSCE turned to nurturing countries' transition to democracy, including by helping them run free and fair elections.

The world paid close attention to OSCE observation missions' verdict on elections held in countries like Ukraine, Romania, and Kazakhstan. But few back then took much notice of the conduct of presidential elections in the United States, the land of the

Some might have been a bit troubled by the main US parties' widespread electoral gerrymandering, more recent Republican efforts to suppress the vote in communities of colour, and the relentlessly partisan political reporting of some local and national media. Overall, however, the handling of US elections gave little cause for concern. Voters chose presidents fairly, albeit through a curious Electoral College system that reflected America's history but sometimes denied victory to the winner of the popular vote.

This year's presidential election took place amid high political tension and a raging Covid-19 pandemic. But the OSCE's verdict was clear: The vote was 'competitive and well managed'. Other independent foreign observers-as well as Republican state officials who organised and administered some of the voting and counting-said the same. But there was a large orange fly in the ointment in the form of President Donald Trump. The OSCE denounced 'baseless allegations of systematic deficiencies, notably by the incumbent president', which 'harm public trust in democratic institutions'.

I guess no one should be surprised at Trump's refusal to concede to President-elect Joe Biden, which delayed by weeks the start of the transition to the new administration. While daily US deaths from Covid-19 surged toward a new peak, Trump sulked, tweeting claims he had made before Election Day that he could lose only if Democrats cheated.

In arguing that his loss—by about six million votes-must be a fraud, Trump is behaving just as he did when he was an expensively failing businessman. Every collapsed deal, every dispute with a bank that had foolishly lent him money, spawned a specious legal challenge. Trump could never admit that he had lost. Authoritarian states such as Russia and China have argued for years that core liberal-democratic principles—including the rule of law, an independent judiciary, civil society, freedom of expression, and the separation of powers—are hypocritical and hollow.

Open societies have to stand up for the principles their institutions embody. Confucius argued that leaders' moral qualities matter more than institutions, but history surely vindicates the importance of both. Corrupt, cowardly, and venal leaders often destroy the institutional foundations of their countries' governance

Although Trump has done Putin's and Xi's destructive work for them, he could not have managed it without the collaboration of other Republican Party leaders, especially in the Senate. They know how dangerous Trump's post-election behaviour has been, but, fearing him and his most virulent supporters, they have given their principles a long holiday.

Senator Lindsey Graham of South Carolina, who in 2016 described Trump as a 'xenophobic, race-baiting, religious bigot', recently lobbied Republican secretaries of state in Georgia and Arizona to see whether they might be able to disqualify any

The commander of this fifth column is Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell of Kentucky. His primary concern is to hold on to his job by ensuring that the Republicans retain control of the Senate following two run-off elections in Georgia in early January. So, McConnell does not want to do anything that may deter Trump supporters there from turning out to vote.

votes cast in Democratic areas

McConnell does not seem to believe in partnership and accommodation. During Barack Obama's administration, he blocked much of the Democratic president's agenda, just for the sake of blocking it. Consensus is an alien concept to him.

The enablers of all this wanton destruction are the media who parrot and broadcast Trump's agenda. Fox News has been the principal Trump megaphone, although even it recently seems to have gotten cold feet about continuing to resemble media outlets in authoritarian countries. This assertion of independence-which, admittedly, amounts to no more than acknowledging the fairness and outcome of the election-has naturally annoyed its usual star in the White

In Australia, former prime minister Kevin Rudd recently launched a record-breaking e-petition calling for a formal inquiry into Rupert Murdoch's near-monopoly control of the country's print media. It's not hard to see why more than a half-million people signed it.

Nor is it hard to see why America's authoritarian rivals are probably satisfied with the outcome. By undermining liberal democracy in America, Republican leaders and the GOP's media allies are giving them a big helping hand.

As pandemic continues, frozen food sales boom

People thought it wiser to stock up on refrigerated products and avoid crowded shops.

Frozen French fries, sweet corn, momo, prawn and other seafood, and meat items are popular among customers, retailers say.

Sales of frozen foods skyrocketed after the lockdown as housebound valley residents went for items that could be stored for long periods, and now they seem to have become hooked on them, said traders.

According to retailers, sales of frozen foods like meat and fish swelled by more than 40 percent after the government issued stay-home orders in March to contain the spread of coronavirus infections

Sabindra Byanjankar, sales manager at Bhat Bhateni Super Market, said that demand for frozen foods has soared compared to pre-lockdown days. "Frozen food sales have doubled in recent months, and during weekends and festivals, sales rise threefold," Byanjankar told the Post.

The major reason for the increase in demand for frozen food is that people now prefer to cook special dishes at home instead of going out to restaurants and hotels, he said. "With the winter season upon us, demand for frozen momos and meat items has risen compared to before." Chet Narayan Poudel, chief operating officer at SalesBerry, said the consumption of frozen foods increased by 35-40 percent after the coronavirus.

"As the markets were closed during the lockdown, people's options were limited and they started buying frozen food items for reasons of quality and hygiene," he said.

After people purchased frozen foods, they liked them so much they wanted to have them more often, he said. Sales of frozen foods also jumped sharply during Dashain this year, he added. Frozen food manufacturers and suppliers said that demand from their biggest customers, the restaurants, had declined steeply while retail sales rose by 15 to 20 percent after the virus.

Frozen French fries and varieties of potato fries, sweet corn, momo, fish prawn and other seafood, and meat items are popular among customers, said retailers.

Raj Kumar Ghimire, owner of Pacific Frozen Food, supplier and manufacturer, said that demand from restaurants had been increasing steadily until the lockdown forced them to close. "But frozen foods are becoming very popular among retail buyers," Ghimire said.

Instead of going shopping daily for fresh vegetables and meats with the pandemic raging relentlessly, people thought it wiser to stock up on refrigerated foods and avoid crowded marketplaces, merchants said.

Also, keeping food frozen for a long time kills germs, so it's hygienic and that has increased the popularity of frozen food products, he said. Ghimire's company makes frozen food items such as vegetables and meats. Sujan Pradhan, owner of Saathi ko Pasal, says he has been supplying frozen food products to hotels, restaurants and supermarkets. Orders from hotels and restaurants have gone down, but supermarkets are ordering more, he said.

Pradhan opened his shop at Jhochhen three years ago. He said that there was good demand for frozen foods before Covid-19, but after the pandemic, sales took off with people fearing to go to vegetable markets and

With restaurants and hotels closed people started ordering frozen foods like French fries, momos and sausages besides vegetables and meat items. Retail consumption surged after the pandemic. Imported frozen foods cost more than local products, he said.

Demand for frozen foods used to increase during festivals like Dashain and Tihar; but after Covid-19, there has been a sales boom, Pradhan said. Daily sales now come to around Rs25,000 while the turnover was around Rs15,000 before the pandemic,

From small businesses to farmers, middle India is driving demand

NEW DELHI/MUMBAI, NOV 29

Manish Mehra, owner of Washex Hospitality, an industrial laundry service, recently flew from Delhi to Jodhpur, a city in north-western India, to win a contract to service a large, government-run hospital—a move essential to kickstarting his business.

"For a new relationship it is essential to know each other before you can establish the trust and confidence to work online and that need is higher in case of government departments,' said Mehra, who had to stay for a week in a Jodhpur hotel.

Increased demand for air travel and hotel stays by small business owners like Mehra, accompanied by a rise in rural incomes and spending after two good monsoons, is helping the pandemic-hit Indian economy slowly recover.

Government data released on Friday showed the economy shrank 7.5 percent in the July-September quarter, performing better than analysts' expectation of an 8.8 percent contraction as lockdowns were eased and some pent-up demand was met. In the April-June period, the economy shrank 23.9 percent.

Annual growth of 3.4 percent in farm sector and 0.6 percent in manufacturing during the September quarter has raised hopes of an early recovery and some service sectors such as trade, hotels and transport contracted at a much slower pace compared with the April-June period.

Farmers, benefiting from a bumper crop, are lapping up tractors while demand for personal vehicles, due to a lack of public transport and the need for safer travel options, has boosted sales of cars and motorcycles

There has also been an uptick in goods and services, tax collections and higher energy consumption.

A recovery is taking shape and it has been led by the manufacturing sector which has moved from near annihilation in the July quarter to rebound mode, said Yuvika Singhal, an economist at QuantEco Research.

"Until there is a stronger recovery in high contact service sectors which make up 60 percent of the GDP agriculture and manufacturing are expected to carry the growth," said Singhal, adding that India is still growing on a lower GDP base and it will take more than a year to recover lost output.

A string of Marriot hotels in indus trial towns like Sriperumbudur, Visakhapatnam and Nasik are operating at 50 percent to 60 percent occupancy with the bulk of guests working with domestic manufacturing compa nies, said Ashish Jakhanwala, CEO of hospitality firm SAMHI which owns the properties.

Meanwhile SAMHI's hotel in the tech-city of Bengaluru, that mainly depends on large corporates, is filling only 20 percent to 30 percent of rooms

Domestic airlines resume Mt Everest sightseeing flights after eight months

POST REPORT

The domestic airlines have announced resuming mountain view flights from next week after eight months of closure, as economic activities have started to pick-up again and return to normal, including all tourism-related activities. The airlines have launched "Buy one, get one free" ticket offer to entice the passengers

"Now, the domestic passenger movement has started to pick up. Along with the travel demand, there has been a request for sightseeing activities from people as well as foreigners, especially residential foreigners who have been serving in Nepal," said Sudarshan Bartaula, spokesperson for Yeti Airlines.

"We will be conducting the flight once a week [on Saturday] and increase the frequency based on the demand," he said. Yeti Airlines has announced three tiers of airfares. For Nepali flyers who buy a ticket costing Rs8,999, they will get another ticket free. The total flight time is 45

Similarly, for Indian and residential foreigners, the fare is Rs13,499. They will also get one ticket free. The scheme will not be applicable to other tourists, said Bartaula.

Buddha Air has also announced the with buy one, get one free offer. It will fly once a week on Saturday. "We expect the flight resumption, one of the key tourism products, will provide momentum to the slowed tourism activities to some extent," Buddha Air said in a statement. Buddha Air has fixed the fare for the major income-generating activities for domestic airlines as it offers passengers views of the Himalayas, including the highest mountains on the earth, flying from Kathmandu.

The flights were closed since the government announced the nationwide lockdown on March 24, halting all flights, except for emergency purposes

During the peak tourism season, airlines used to make at least 10 mountain view flights a day.

According to an official of Buddha Air, passenger occupancy in domestic airlines has started to pick up. On Sunday, Buddha Air received 5,000 passengers, the highest number since the airlines resumed normal flights from September 21.

Suited avatars and digital offices: Traders and bankers embrace VR

A file photo shows a visitor grabbing for a virtual book from an empty shelf as he wears augmented reality goggles during Gamescom, in Cologne, Germany.

LONDON, NOV 29

Once the preserve of gamers, virtual reality (VR) has been seized on by the financial sector as a way of enlivening home working for lonely traders or isolated executives and replicating real-world sales, networking or train-

With 90 percent of employees at some of the world's biggest financial firms now working at home due to a resurgence in coronavirus infections, more and more companies are experimenting with VR.

Some practices could stick beyond the pandemic, particularly as home working becomes more widespread.

At investment manager Fidelity International, executives experimented with a VR auditorium, taking questions from colleagues and even walking up and down the aisles.

"Working from home has massively accelerated the interest in virtual/ online spaces," said Stuart Warner, head of technology at Fidelity International which manages $3.3 trillion in assets.

"It brings it to life a bit," Warner said. For London-based Ed Greig, chief disruptor at Deloitte Digital, VR has sparked conversations with potential clients and colleagues in far-flung cities in office get-togethers. "The other day, I was finishing a VR meeting with somebody and as I was walking out of their office I bumped into a person who was coming in for another meeting and that interaction for a couple of minutes turned into a proper business conversation later," Greig said.VR can be useful not just for scheduled meetings but also for helping ease feelings of isolation and giving some workers the office buzz they crave and thrive in. Swiss bank UBS has experimented with issuing its London-based traders with Microsoft HoloLens smart glasses, which it says allows staff to recreate the trading floor experience at home.

VR headsets allow users to see and interact with others in the same digital room, and movements, such as turning one's head, correspond with how the person's avatar moves in Recreating the feeling of human interaction is what has provided impetus for the VR push.

Fitch downgrades Sri Lanka's sovereign credit rating

LONDON, NOV 29

Fitch downgraded Sri Lanka's sovereign credit rating to "CCC" on Friday, warning the country's debt levels were set to soar past 100 percent of GDP and that it was increasingly at risk of default. Sri Lanka relies on tourism and garment exports for foreign exchange reserves. It's been hit hard by the pandemic, which has undercut consumer demand and curtailed almost all global travel finance ministry called the downgrade "baseless" and "based on uncorroborated facts" saying the government had acted to contain the economic impact of the pandemic faster than many other emerging countries.

In a statement, Sri Lanka's

"We do not accept this downgrade as it fails to recognise the robust policy framework of the new government for addressing the legacy issues," the statement said.

Sri Lanka has around $4 billion of debt repayments due annually until 2025. Its foreign exchange reserves stand at just under $6 billion leaving it little room to spare. Earlier this month, Finance Minister Mahinda Rajapaksa presented an ambitious budget that aimed to more than halve the fiscal deficit over the medium term. But Fitch said it expected the country's fiscal position to worsen, not improve, over the next few years.

It expects the government's ratio of debt to gross domestic product to increase to about 100 percent in 2020 from 86.8 percent in 2019 and to rise to around 116 percent in 2024.

Sri Lanka's own targets see a reduction in debt-to-GDP to 75.5 percent in 2025, from an estimated 95.1 percent in 2020.

Rival ratings agency Moody's downgraded Sri Lanka to an equivalent level in September, noting the country's debt repayments in the next few years.

Suspected extremists kill at least 40 farmers in Nigeria

BRIEFING

MAIDGURI: Suspected members of the Islamic militant group Boko Haram killed at least 40 rice farmers and fishermen while they were harvesting crops in Nigeria's northern Borno State, officials said. The attack was staged Saturday in a rice field in Garin Kwashebe, a Borno community known for rice farming, on the day residents of the state were casting votes for the first time in 13 years to elect local government councils, though many didn't go to cast their ballots. The farmers were reportedly rounded up and summarily killed by armed insurgents.

Afghan officials say 34 killed in separate suicide bombings

GHAZNI: At least 34 people were killed on Sunday in two separate suicide bombings in Afghanistan that targeted a military base and a provincial chief, officials said. There were no immediate claims of responsibility for the attacks, which took place as Afghan government representatives and the Taliban hold face-to-face talks in Qatar for the first time to end the country's decades-long war. In eastern Ghazni province, 31 soldiers were killed and 24 others wounded when the attacker drove a military humvee full of explosives onto an army commando base before detonating the car bomb, according to an official in Afghanistan's National Security Council, who spoke anonymously because he was not permitted to speak directly to the media.

Thai protesters challenge king's military command

BANGKOK: Thai anti-government protesters challenged on Sunday King Maha Vajiralongkorn's personal control over some army units to condemn the military's role in politics. It was the latest open defiance of the king by protesters, who have broken taboos by criticising the monarchy in a country where it is officially revered under the constitution and laws to ban insulting it. Hundreds of protesters gathered to march to the 11th Infantry Regiment, one of two units that were moved under the king's command in 2019. "An army should belong to the people, not the king," Parit "Penguin" Chiwarak told reporters. "In a democratic system, the king is not responsible for directing command of the military." The Ethiopian government launched a manhunt on Sunday for leaders of a rebellious faction in the northern region of Tigray after announcing federal troops had taken over the regional capital and military operations were complete.

Prime Minister Abiy Ahmed government has been trying to quell a rebellion by the Tigray People's Liberation Front (TPLF), a powerful ethnically-based party that dominated the central government from 1991 until Abiy came to power in 2018.

He said on Saturday evening federal troops had taken control of the Tigrayan capital Mekelle within hours of launching an offensive there, laying to rest fears of protracted fighting in the city of 500,000 people.

The prime minister, who refers to the three-week-old conflict as an internal law and order matter and has rebuffed international offers of mediation, said federal police will try to arrest TPLF "criminals" and bring

It was not clear if any TPLF leaders had surrendered, their whereabouts or their next plans.

"Their brutality can only add (to) our resolve to fight these invaders to the last," the TPLF's Debretsion told Reuters in a text message on Saturday. Asked by Reuters if that meant his forces would continue fighting, he replied: "Certainly. This is about defending our right to self determination.'

Debretsion said in another text message that Tigrayan forces were withdrawing from around Mekelle.

Serum Institute CEO sees AstraZeneca's Covid-19 vaccine as 'very good' candidate

MUMBAI/NEW DELHI, NOV 29

Serum Institute of India, the world's largest vaccine producer, sees AstraZeneca Plc's Covid-19 vaccine candidate as a "very good" option, giving it a major vote of confidence after some experts raised questions around its trial data. Serum Institute of India (SII), which has partnered with the British drugmaker to conduct trials on its COVISHIELD vaccine in India and produce the vaccine candidate if it secures approval, plans to apply for an emergency use licence for the vaccine in the next two weeks, said SII's Chief Executive Adar Poonawalla.

"This vaccine is a very good one," said Poonawalla, via a virtual press briefing following Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi's visit to SII's campus on Saturday.

"What we found with COVISHIELD in its global trial is there were zero hospitalisations, which means even if you do get infected you're not going to have a severe attack and secondly even those who got the disease were not infecting others," he said.

Serum Institute of India plans to apply for an emergency use licence for the vaccine in Poonawalla's comments come as a boost to AstraZeneca after some scientists raised doubts about the robustness of results showing the shot was 90 percent effective in a sub-group of trial participants who, by error initially, received a half dose followed by

He also noted that the AstraZeneca vaccine, along with the vaccine from Novavax - the US vaccine developer that SII has also partnered with offered a significant edge over the vaccine candidates of certain rivals, which need to be stored at much lower

"Both our vaccine candidates can be stored in 2 Celsius to 8 Celsius and India has lot of storage and infrastructure for that temperature range. It has slightly less storage capacity for -20 C and almost nothing for -70 C, said Poonawalla. US vaccine developers Moderna and Pfizer recently announced strong efficacy results on their respective vaccine candidates, but both of their vaccines need to be stored at very low temperatures that developing economies.

Moderna has said its vaccine can be stored at normal fridge temperatures of 2 to 8 degrees Celsius for 30 days and it can be stored for up to 6 months at -20C. Pfizer's experimental vaccine must be stored at -70C over longer durations.

Pennsylvania court rejects lawsuit challenging election

ASSOCIATED PRESS HARRISBURG, NOV 29

Pennsylvania's highest court on Saturday night threw out a lower court's order preventing the state from certifying dozens of contests on its November 3 election ballot in the latest lawsuit filed by Republicans attempting to thwart President-elect Joe Biden's victory in the battleground state.

The state Supreme Court, in a unanimous decision, threw out the threeday-old order, saying the underlying lawsuit was filed months after the expiration of a time limit in Pennsylvania's expansive year-old mail-in voting law allowing for chal-

Justices also remarked on the lawsuit's staggering demand that an election be overturned retroactively.

"They have failed to allege that even a single mail-in ballot was fraudulently cast or counted," Justice David Wecht wrote in a concurring opinion.

The state's attorney general, Democrat Josh Shapiro, called the court's decision "another win for Democracy."

President Donald Trump and his lawyer, Rudy Giuliani, meanwhile, have repeatedly and baselessly claimed that Democrats falsified mailin ballots to steal the election. Biden beat Trump by more than 80,000 votes in Pennsylvania, a state Trump had

The week-old lawsuit, led by Republican US Rep. Mike Kelly of northwestern Pennsylvania, had challenged the state's mail-in voting law as unconstitutional.

As a remedy, Kelly and the other Republican plaintiffs had sought to either throw out the 2.5 million mail-in ballots submitted under the law-most of them by Democratsor to wipe out the election results and direct the state's Republican-Legislature pick Pennsylvania's presidential electors.

In any case, that request-for the state's lawmakers to pick Pennsylvania's presidential electors flies in the face of a nearly century-old state law that already grants the power to pick electors to the state's popular vote, Wecht wrote. While the high court's two

Republicans joined the five Democrats in opposing those remedies, they split from Democrats in suggesting that the lawsuit's underlying claimsthat the state's mail-in voting law might violate the constitution-are worth considering.

Commonwealth Court Judge Patricia McCullough, elected as a Republican in 2009, had issued the order Wednesday to halt certification of any remaining contests, including apparently contests for

It did not appear to affect the presidential contest since a day earlier, Gov. Tom Wolf, a Democrat, had certified Biden as the winner of the presidential election in Pennsylvania.

Wolf quickly appealed McCullough's decision to the state Supreme Court, saying there was no "conceivable justification" for it.

Indian farmers defiant against reform as Prime Minister Modi tries to calm anger

NEW DELHI, NOV 29

Thousands of Indian farmers, angry over reform of the agriculture sector, held a third day of protests on the outskirts of the capital on Sunday, blocking roads into the city and defying a government appeal to move to a designated site.

The government on Saturday invited farmers' union leaders for talks on new legislation to deregulate agriculture sector but that has not calmed farmers' anger over what many see "anti-farm laws", and their action appeared to be spreading.

'We will stay put here today," said Rakesh Tikait, spokesman of the Bharatiya Kisan Union, one of more than 30 protesting unions, as he and his members blocked a road on the eastern approaches to Delhi.

The farmers object to legislation introduced by Prime Minister Narendra Modi's government in September that would let farmers sell their produce anywhere, including to big corporate buyers like Walmart, not just at government-regulated wholesale markets where growers are assured of a minimum price.

Small growers worry they will be left vulnerable to big business and could eventually lose price support for staples such as wheat and rice.

Modi sought to allay farmers' concerns on Sunday. "From these reforms, farmers will get new rights and opportunities," he said in his monthly radio address. But one farm union leader said

BRIEFING

New Zealand down West Indies, bag Twenty20 series

WELLINGTON: Glenn Phillips smashed the fastest Twenty20 international hundred for New Zealand to help the hosts to a 72-run win against West Indies on Sunday and an unassailable 2-0 lead in the three-match series. The middle-order batsman hit eight sixes and 10 fours in his 108 off 51 balls as the hosts, who won the opening T20 by five wickets, posted a massive 238 for three in their 20 overs after put in to bat first at Mount Maunganui. West Indies kept losing wickets at regular intervals in their chase and could only reach 166 for nine. Colin Munro had taken 47 balls to reach his century against West Indies at the same ground in 2018 for New Zealand's fastest hundred in the shortest format of the game, but Phillips bettered the mark. None of the West Indies bowlers could make an impact, with fast bowler Keemo Paul returning the worst figures among them, conceding 64 off his

Ronaldo-less Juventus held 1-1 by Benevento in Serie A

BENEVENTO: Serie A titleholders Juventus were held to a 1-1 draw away to promoted side Benevento on Saturday, their fifth draw in nine league games this season, after rest ing their talismanic forward Cristiano Ronaldo. Alvaro Morata gave Juventus a 21st-minute lead but was sent off as tempers flared at the end of a niggly second half. Gaetano Letizia rifled in Benevento's equaliser in first-half stoppage time. Elsewhere, Inter Milan scored twice in the first 15 minutes on their way to a convincing 3-0 win at previously unheaten Sassuolo

Bayern Munich beat Stuttgart to top Bundesliga

STUTTGART: Bayern Munich came from a goal down to beat VfB Stuttgart 3-1 on Saturday and stay top of the Bundesliga. The hosts went in front in the 20th minute after Tanguy Coulibaly beat keeper Manuel Neuer to the ball to score. Bayern's Kingsley Coman punished the home side, hitting them on the break to level in the 38th minute. Robert Lewandowski drilled in his 12th league goal of the season on the stroke of halftime from a Coman assist to turn the game around. It was not until Douglas Costa's low shot in the 87th made it 3-1 that the Bavarians were able to breathe more easily. Bayern are on 22 points with RB Leipzig second on 20 after beating Arminia Bielefeld 2-1. Borussia Dortmund dropped to third on 18 after suffering a shock 2-1 home loss to Cologne, Elsewhere, Borussia Moenchengladbach registered an impressive 4-1 victory over

13th South Asian Games expenses unveiled, but nearly after one year

Rs 1.75 billion was spent on infrastructure while Rs 1.31 billion went to the holding of matches during the Games.

SPORTS BUREAU

The National Sports Council (NSC) on Sunday unveiled the details of the Rs 3.06 billion spent to organise the 13th South Asian Games (SAG), nearly a year after the sub-continental sporting event was held in December, 2019.

Of the total expenses, the NSC said Rs 1.75 billion was spent on infrastructure while Rs 1.31 billion went to the holding of sports events from the state coffers, according to the financial report released on Sunday. However, Rs 2.86 billion was the total amount spent over the past years on infrastructure development.

NSC Member Secretary Ramesh Kumar Silwal, who had promised to make public the transaction details of SAG within three months of the completion of the Games held from December 1 to 10, shared the details of incomes and expenses only after more than 11 months.

"It took really longer than what I expected to collect and prepare the financial report of the mega event," said Silwal, who was hailed for successfully organising the multi-disciplinary sports event six months after his appointment at the council, apologising for the delay.

"It took a long time to collect the expenditure details of the event held at three different locations of the country. We were able to collect all details by mid-November only. The lockdown imposed by the government to curb the spread of the coronavirus also contributed to the delay," said Silwal at a press conference on Sunday.

National Sports Council Member Secretary Ramesh Kumar Silwal (centre) makes public the transactions of the South Asian Games on Sunday.

The event, which featured 26 disciplines, was organised in Kathmandu, Pokhara and Janakpur. Altogether 3,652 athletes had participated in the events that saw competition among seven member associations of the SAARC region.

While the government had allocated a budget of Rs 3.65 billion for the organising part, Rs 1.93 billion was frozen, prompting Silwal to make a claim that the NSC saved almost Rs 2.4 billion of the taxpayers' money. The budget does not include the cash reward given to medalists of the Games by the government.

"Rather than going for the public spending procedure due to the short time available, we resorted to direct contact for buying the required kits. So we were able to save the cost. Besides, we also reduced the budget for the opening and closing ceremonies while the Home Ministry took over the responsibility of security without us having to spend on it," said

The Ministry of Youth and Sports had formed a taskforce to prepare an estimated budget for the Games in June last year and the Pitambar Timalsina-led committee had proposed a budget of Rs 5.265 billion for work execution. But the government had allocated only Rs 3.65 billion.

It was the third time that Nepal hosted the games after hosting the first edition in 1984 and the eighth in 1999. Nepal had wrapped up the event with a record haul of 51 gold, 60 silver and 96 bronze medals to finish second in the medal standings. India once again dominated the final medal count with a total of 312 medals, including

Smith ton guides Australia to series win

REUTERS

Steve Smith was at his imperious best as he scored a second successive 62-ball century to drive Australia to a 51-run victory over India at the Sydney Cricket Ground on Sunday, sealing the one-day series 2-0 with a match to spare.

The clash, almost a carbon copy of Australia's 66-run win in Friday's match, was soured for the home fans by an injury to David Warner which may rule him out of the Test series around the new year. Warner had scored a bright 83 in an opening partnership of 142 with his skipper Aaron Finch (60) as Australia pile on 389-4

Four overs into India's reply Warner injured his adductor while fielding and had to be helped off the field. His team mates wrapped up the match comfortably enough despite a fine innings of 89 from Virat Kohli and a 72 from wicketkeeper KL Rahul as India limped to 338-9.

India's openers were dismissed in successive overs with only 60 runs on the board before skipper Kohli took charge and put together partnerships of 93 with Shreyas Iyer (38) and 72 with Rahul. Once the skipper departed to a flying catch by Moises Henriques off Josh Hazlewood, Rahul took up the mantle to keep alive Indian hopes that they might just pull off their biggest ever successful run chase in one-dayers.

Earlier, the day had belonged to the Australian top order, who once again showed their skills in the face of some lacklustre bowling. Smith needed only 64 balls for his 104 before falling to all-rounder Hardik Pandya. Glenn Maxwell's belligerent unbeaten 63 from 29 balls and a stroke-filled 70 from Marnus Labuschagne helped Australia build on the strong platform and finish with a flourish.

Man City crush Burnley as Everton lose again

REUTERS

MANCHESTER, NOV 29

Riyad Mahrez scored a hat-trick in Manchester City's 5-0 crushing of Burnley in the Premier League on Saturday, while Carlo Ancelotti's Everton suffered their fourth defeat in five games after a Raphinha goal gave Leeds United a 1-0 win at the Goodison Park. West Bromwich Albion celebrated their first win of the season as they beat bottom team Sheffield United 1-0 to move out of the bottom three after Conor Gallagher scored his maiden Premier League goal.

Manchester City had a goal ruled out by VAR but will have barely cared given they had already taken a 5-0 lead by the time Gabriel Jesus's effort was overturned. It was the fourth straight 5-0 win for City against Burnley at the Etihad and Sean Dyche's side were fortunate to leave with that scoreline.

Slack defending from the Clarets allowed Mahrez to score twice early in the game — both times with his trademark move in from the flank followed by a left-foot shot into the far corner. Benjamin Mendy headed in the third goal before the break and Ferran Torres added the fourth before Mahrez completed his hat-trick with a header.

City had managed just 10 goals in eight games before Saturday's rout and manager Pep Guardiola was relieved. "We have to score, that's why they are here and play up front. The most important thing now is we have almost 21 players fit," he said.

Brazilian winger Raphinha scored his first goal for Leeds in another game which saw goals disallowed. Everton's James Rodriguez and Richarlison had the ball in the net but both efforts were ruled out for offside, and Leeds striker Patrick Bamford suffered a similar fate.

Raphinha appeared to be looking for a pass but he checked back, driving the ball between the legs of defender Ben Godfrey and in at the foot of the far post in the 79th minute. The two teams managed 38 goal attempts. "This is a more difficult period," said Ancelotti, "In a difficult period you can see how players react — see their personality and character. I still have confidence. We need consistency."

In the late game, Gallagher netted 13th-minute winner for West Brom as Sheffield United missed a string of chances in an action-packed match.

Real lose, Atletico win sixth straight league match

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MADRID, NOV 29

As Diego Simeone keeps celebrating Atletico Madrid victories, Zinedine Zidane continues to look for answers to Real Madrid's struggles. Atlético defeated Valencia 1-0 for a sixth win in a row in La Liga on Saturday, while Madrid lost to Alaves 2-1 at home for their third straight setback, dropping six points behind the city rival and having played one extra game.

"I don't have an explanation," Zidane said. "We haven't been consistent. We need to change this dynamic." Lucas Perez scored in the first half and Joselu in the second after a blunder by goalkeeper Thibaut Courtois for mid-table Alaves. Casemiro scored their lone goal in the 86th.

Madrid also lost Eden Hazard because of an apparent injury in the first half, the latest injury woe for the Belgium forward who was making only his fifth start this season. Atletico Madrid defeated Valencia with an own-goal by Valencia defender Toni Lato in the 79th minute. Victory extended their winning streak to six matches in the Spanish league. Atletico are yet to trail in league and remain the only unbeaten team. They haven't lost in 25 league matches.

Books by bike: Sri Lankan man runs mobile library for kids

Mahinda Dasanayaka, 32, works as a child protection officer for the government. On his off days he rides his motorbike to rural villages and distributes reading material to children for free.

Dasanayaka rides his motorbike which doubles up as a mobile library in a village in Kegalle district, about 85 kilometres northeast of Sri Lanka's capital, Colombo. (Right) Children look to borrow books from his mobile library.

BHARATHA MALLAWARACHI

uring his leisure time, Mahinda Dasanayaka packs his motorbike with books and rides his mobile library—across mostly muddy roads running through tea-growing mountain areas—to underprivileged children in backward rural parts of Sri Lanka.

Having witnessed the hardships faced by children whose villages have no library facilities, Dasanayaka was looking for ways to help them.

Then he got the idea for his library on wheels.

He started his program, called "Book and Me," three years ago, and it has become very popular among the children. "There are some kids who hadn't seen even a children's storybook until I went to their villages," he said.

Dasanayaka, 32, works as a child protection officer for the government. On his off days—mostly during weekends—he rides his motorbike, which is fixed with a steel box to hold books, to rural villages and distributes the reading material to children free of charge.

"The children are very keen and enthusiastic, they are eagerly waiting for me—always looking for new books," Dasanayaka said

His program is mainly centred in Kegalle, a mountainous region of the Indian Ocean island nation about 85 kilometres (52 miles) northeast of Sri Lanka's capital, Colombo, with poor villages scattered among tea plantations. He visits the villages once or twice a week to distribute the books.

His collection includes about 3,000 books on a variety of subjects. "Boys mostly like to read detective stories such as Sherlock Holmes, while girls prefer to read youth novels and biographies." he said.

novels and biographies," he said. So far, he said, his program has benefited more than 1,500 children, as well as about 150 adults. He began the program in 2017 Dasanayaka says his programme has benefited more than 1,500 children so far, as well as about 150 adults.

with 150 books—some of his own and others donated by friends, colleagues and well-wishers. He bought a second-hand Honda motorbike for 30,000 Sri Lankan rupees ($162). He then fixed a steel box on the bike's pillion seat.

"I wanted to do something for children who are burdened with an exam-centred education. ... And to change the way kids look at society, to change their perspectives and broaden their imagination," he said.

Apart from giving away books, Dasanayaka also speaks to the children for a few minutes, usually under a roadside tree, highlighting the value of reading, books and authors. He then conducts a discussion on books the children have read, with the aim of eventually forming reading clubs.

His program has spread to more than 20 villages in Kegalle. He also has expanded it to some villages in Sri Lanka's former civil war zone in the northern region, more than 340 kilometres (211 miles) from his home.

The long civil war ended in 2009 when government troops defeated Tamil rebels who were fighting to create a separate state for their ethnic minority in the north.

Dasanayaka, who is from the ethnic majority Sinhalese, believes books can build a "bridge between two ethnic groups."

"Books can be used for the betterment of society and promote ethnic reconciliation—because no one can get angry with books." he said. He also has established mini libraries at intersections in some of the villages he visits, giving children and adults a place to share books. These involve installing a small steel box that can be opened from one side onto a wall or on a stand. So far, he has built four such facilities and aims to set up 20 in different villages.

While Dasanayaka spends his own money on his program, he is not wealthy, with a take-home income of 20,000 rupees ($108) a month from his job. He said he spends about a quarter of that on gasoline for his mobile library.

He lives with his wife, who is also a government worker, and their two children.

"I live a simple life," he said.
"No big hopes, and I am not chasing after material values such as big houses and cars."

Nuwan Liyanage, senior deputy general manager of local radio station Neth FM, called Dasanayaka "a hero of our time." The station has been helping Dasanayaka collect books.

"He has set a real example for society," Liyanage said. "With very little resources, he has done remarkable things, and his project has opened the eyes of many others to do similar things."

Mohomed Haris Shihara, 48, a nursery school teacher in the village of Kannantota, about 20 kilometres (12 miles) from Dasanayaka's home, praised the program, saying it has benefited about 100 children in her village.

"This is a great thing and it has helped to develop an interest among the kids to read books," she said. "Also, the follow-up discussions on books have widened the children's knowledge."

Dasanayaka said he does not seek any monetary benefit from his program.

"My only happiness is to see that children read books, and I would be delighted to hear the kids say that books helped them to change their lives," he said. "And that's my ultimate happiness."

Pubs to stay shut in many areas in new English virus curbs Leisure venues such as cinemas and bowling alleys must stay closed. Shops, gyms, hairdressers and beauty parlors will be able to open across the country, however.

A man wearing a face mask walks past Christmas trees in Covent Garden, during England's second coronavirus lockdown in London.

ost people in England will continue to face tight restrictions on socialising and business after a nationwide lockdown ends on December 2, with pubs and restaurants ordered to remain shut in areas that are home to more than 20 million people.

The government announced details on Thursday of three-level regional measures that will take effect from Wednesday. Only three remote and island areas with a total population of 700,000 are in the lowest tier, where pubs and restaurants can open almost as normal and members of different households can meet up indoors.

More than half of England's 56 mil-

More than han of England's 36 million people, including London's Rimillion residents, are in the middle level, where most shops, restaurants and leisure businesses can open—with some restrictions—and audiences can return in limited numbers to theatres and sports stadiums.

Another 23 million people in a huge chunk of central and northern England, including the large cities of Birmingham and Manchester, along with the large southeastern county of Kent, will be placed in the top tier, where pubs and restaurants can only serve takeout and delivery, and leisure venues such as cinemas and bowling alleys must stay closed. Shops, gyms, hairdressers and beauty parlors will be able to open across the country, however.

Prime Minister Boris Johnson said "tough measures" would be needed until spring, when it's hoped a combination of vaccines and mass testing can help life return to normal.

"If we ease off now we risk losing control over this virus all over again, casting aside our hard-won gains and forcing us back into a New Year national lockdown, with all the damage that would mean," he said at a news conference.

The government imposed a four-week lockdown in England early this month to curb an autumn surge in coronavirus cases, with travel restricted and nonessential businesses closed. The government's statistics office says the infection rate appears to have levelled off, but Health Secretary Matt Hancock said "we must remain vigilant."

The measures must be approved by Parliament, which is due to vote next week. Johnson faces opposition from some of his own Conservative Party lawmakers, who say the economic damage from the measures outweighs the public health gains.

Operators of pubs and theatres were among those warning that they can't make money under conditions imposed in tier 2, where alcohol can only be served with meals and entertainment venues are restricted to half

"There has got to be a real danger that if these restrictions aren't lifted very, very soon now there will be a lot of businesses that simply won't reopen," said Conservative legislator Graham Brady, who said he planned to vote against the "authoritarian" measures. Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland have their own set of restrictions.

The new measures will be reviewed December 16 and lifted for five days over Christmas across the whole UK During the festive period travel restrictions will be paused and up to three households will be able to form a "Christmas bubble" for socializing.

Britain has had Europe's worst coronavirus outbreak, with more than 57,000 confirmed deaths. The government hopes that a combination of mass testing using rapid-turnaround tests and vaccines will allow most restrictions to be lifted by spring 2021.

Hancock said a mass testing project in Liverpool reduced infections by three-quarters and allowed the city to be moved down from tier three to tier two. Three coronavirus vaccines, developed by Pfizer, Moderna and AstraZeneca, have shown promising results in clinical trials but have yet to be approved by Britain's medicines regulator. In the meantime, government scientific advisers are warning people to be careful when using their temporary freedom to meet family and friends at Christmas.

"Would I want someone to see their family? Of course, that's what Christmas is about," England's Chief Medical Officer, Chris Whitty, said.

"But would I encourage someone to hug and kiss their elderly relatives?
No, I would not."

Mammoth move: Loneliest elephant heads to Cambodia after Cher campaign

The pitiful state of the 36-year-old elephant Kaavan had sparked an uproar from animal rights groups and a spirited social media campaign by Cher.

AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE

ollowing years of public outcry and campaigning by American pop star Cher, the "world's loneliest elephant" embarked Sunday on a mammoth move from Pakistan to retirement in a Cambodian sanctuary.

The famed singer and Oscarwinning actress has spent recent days at the Islamabad zoo to provide moral support to Kaavan—an overweight, 36-year-old bull elephant—whose pitiful treatment at the dilapidated facility sparked an uproar from animal rights groups and a spirited social media campaign by Cher.

"My wishes have finally come true," Cher said in a statement thanking her charity Free The Wild.

"We have been counting down to this moment and dreaming of it for so long and to finally see Kaavan transported out of [the Islamabad] zoo will remain with us forever."Kaavan's case and the woeful conditions at the zoo resulted in a judge this year ordering all the animals to be moved.

"Thanks to Cher and also to local Pakistani activists, Kaavan's fate made headlines around the globe and this contributed to the facilitation of his transfer," said Martin Bauer, a spokesman for Four Paws International—an animal welfare group that has spearheaded the relocation effort.

Experts spent hours coaxing a slightly sedated Kaavan into a specially constructed metal crate—at one point using ropes to help pull him in—that was to be hoisted onto a lorry and taken to Islamabad airport.

From there, Kaavan will be sent via a Russian transport jumbo jet for the lengthy flight to Siem Reap in northwestern Cambodia. The plane will stop for refuelling in New Delhi.

Cher spent several days in the Pakistani capital to visit Kaavan before the trip to a 10,000-hectare (25,000-acre) Cambodian wildlife sanctuary, with Prime Minister Imran Khan personally thanking the 74-year-old star. Cher was due to fly to Cambodia on Sunday to be in the Southeast Asian nation when the elephant arrives. Officials said Kaavan will initially be kept in a small designated section of the park where he can see other elephants.

"Sending him to a place where he can be with other elephants of his kind ... is really the right choice," climate change minister Malik Amin Aslam told AFP.

"We will be happy to see him happy in Cambodia and we hope he finds a partner very soon."

'Loneliest' elephant
Dubbed by the press as the world's

Dubbed by the press as the world's loneliest elephant, Kaavan is the only Asian elephant in Pakistan—the tiny number of other pachyderms at other zoos are African.

A team of vets and experts from Four Paws have spent months working with Kaavan to get him ready for the trip to Cambodia, which has included training the elephant to enter the massive metal transport crate that will be placed in a cargo plane for the seven-hour flight.

Zoo officials have in the past denied Kaavan was kept in substandard conditions or chained, claiming instead the creature was pining for a new mate after his partner died in 2012.

But Kaavan's behaviour—including signs of distress such as continual head-bobbing—raised concerns of mental illness.

Activists also said Kaavan was not properly sheltered from Islamabad's searing summer temperatures.

Kaavan's mate Saheli, who also arrived from Sri Lanka, died in 2012. Rights groups and conservationists have said that the abysmal conditions at the Islamabad zoo resulted in part from the lack of legislation in Pakistan aimed at protecting animal welfare. "There's a lot of improvement to be made," said Rab Nawaz with the World Wildlife Federation in Pakistan. "Kaavan is just one animal. There's lots of animals in Pakistan... which are in miserable conditions."
